Course Title	: Introduction to American Society
Course Type	: Optional
Course Teacher	: Dr. Saumyajit Ray
Credits	: 4
Contact hours	: 4 per week

Course objectives

This course intends to introduce students broadly to the United States as a society and to American ideas, institutions, culture, and social problems that are and continue to be typically American.

As important as how the world perceives America is the question of how Americans look at themselves and what measures they take—political, social, and economic—to preserve the United States as an “exceptional” nation in the post-modern world. It is important to understand both.

Learning outcomes

Classroom instruction will be directed at

1. Helping students develop knowledge of America as a diverse and complex society with its own institutions and distinct culture, yet a “nation of immigrants” like no other.
2. Giving students a “sense” of America, and, along with it, a broad idea of what Americanisms mean in the social and political sciences;
3. Inculcating in them the understanding that politics in America, because of the nature of American society, is not merely a struggle for power but a concerted attempt to acquire freedom, equality, and justice for all Americans.

Evaluation Methods

Term paper (25%); performing arts (25%); End Semester Examination (50%). The term paper topics and the movies for review (two per student) are to be decided by the course teacher.

A note about performing arts:

Option 1 (theater): Students are required to divide themselves into suitable groups and stage plays in the group theater format. A maximum of three plays are allowed per batch. Only American group theater plays or their Indian adaptations are allowed to be staged.

Option 2 (musical performance): Students are required to perform two songs from two different genres, subject to the availability of suitable musical instruments. They are required to choose from the following American musical genres: pop, hip-hop, rock, rock & roll, jazz, Blues, country, R&B, soul, Negro Spiritual.
